

Kellan Cobb is taking a vacation in South Lake Tahoe, trying to nurse a broken heart.

Reese Lee is just starting to get back to her life after an accident caused her to rethink some things.

When Kellan runs into a woman at the grocery store and then, again to hang out at a beach football game, she's surprised to find out that the woman doesn't remember her. Only to discover that it's because she met Remy at the store and Remy has a twin, named Reese.

The two women hit it off, but Reese's best friend and former girlfriend, Morgan also seems to take an interest in the vet from San Francisco.

Kellan likes Morgan enough, but is really interested in Reese. She's just not sure if she should date anyone in Tahoe since she's only here on vacation.

When Reese discovers that Morgan and Kellan are spending time together, her sister wonders who she's more jealous of, and it forces Reese to make a decision.

Kellan discovers that the town veterinarian could use a little help and is also about to retire.

Reese tells Kellan about her condition (that she can't feel pain) and that her life expectancy isn't great because of it, but Kellan doesn't care.

She and Reese go on a date and get "trapped" on Fannette Island for the night where Kellan first discovers that there's something unique about Reese Lee. She couldn't feel the cold.

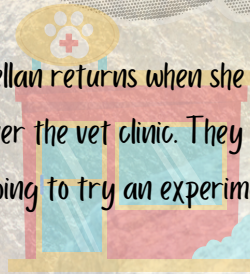

They share their first kiss and their first time, and Kellan is starting to believe that Reese may be the one when Reese has an accident and ends up in the hospital near death.

Luckily, Reese recovers and they know they're going to stay together, but first, Kellan has to go back home to San Francisco.

In the end, they're living together in Tahoe and the treatment begins to show some signs of success.

Kellan returns when she is able and she will take over the vet clinic. They will be together. Reese is going to try an experimental treatment.

They form a fast, long-distance friendship since Adler lives in Seattle and Morgan is in South Lake Tahoe.

They go to a less "touristy" part of South Lake and camp out in a yurt.

When Adler comes to visit, though, Morgan can't help but fall a little more in love with her and now that Adler's single, it's hard because she still might be straight.

On the beach, Adler tells Morgan how she feels, but Morgan isn't sure she believes her until Adler kisses her. They share an intimate moment and Adler knows for sure that this is not merely a friendship.

After their first time, they know they want to be together, but Adler has to go home, so they start a long-distance relationship.

Adler gets passed over for a job at work that she thought she was next in line for, and it has her rethinking some things including what she wants to do professionally and the fact that the woman she wants to spend her life with lives in another state.

When they next go camping together, Adler has a totally different impression of the experience and Morgan discovers that Adler is looking up articles about the right time to move in with her girlfriend.

She returns to South Lake Tahoe with a plan to help Morgan expand the family business and join it herself.
